Dear Dr. Solier:

As souvenirs of your September visit in Norman, Oklahoma, I am enclosing three prints of kodak snapshots I took of groups in which you appeared, and also a print of the La Brea tar pits within the city of Los Angeles, California. I thought you might like to have that picture of ones of those remarkable death traps where hundreds of creatures in ancient days, bogged down in that slimy, tarry mess, to remain there until palaeontologists waded in and sorted out the "gooey" mixture of assorted bones.

The Kansas City Museum, where my collection is on loan, celebrated its seventh anniversary today (Sunday), so I went over and spent the afternoon. Tea and cookies were served the public; these entice the unsuspecting public when perhaps it would shy away from a roomfull of potsherds, etc.

It was nice being with you down in Oklahoma, and I hope you will make yourself known to me, if you should come to Kansas City.

Sincerely,

Harry M. Trowbridge
